Patriotic Doctors of Iran Protest the Execution of Young Iranians amid the War

Executing young Iranians in the middle of a war is not justice. It is political murder.

While Iran suffers under the pressure of war, fear and instability, the Islamic Republic is once again turning human lives into an instrument of power.

Young people detained after protests and unrest are treated with neither human dignity nor respect for their civil rights. They have become hostages of a regime that for years has built its survival on fear, prison, torture and executions.

When executions intensify in wartime, the message is clear: human beings have been turned into tools of intimidation, bargaining and political pressure.

For years, many foreign governments tried to contain this regime through negotiation and compromise. Yet today, when it sees itself weakened and cornered, it is stepping up executions as a sign of cruelty and coercion.

This is not law.

This is not justice.

This is a regime that holds an entire nation hostage.

We strongly condemn these cruel executions.

Long live Iran

Long live the noble people of Iran
